movement has been exemplified many times in the Juvenile Court of Richmond. It was only recently that a twelve-year-old boy was brought into the court of the cou the court on a charge of larceny. He was the eldest of three children, and his mother was a widow. On her plea and her assurance that the boy would and her assurance that the boy would be sent to relatives in the country, another chance was given him. The mother married again, and the second marriage was a mistake. She had to return to her work in the factory, and the boy went back to the streets. He saw things he desired, and had not the same to pay for. It was a question with the judge whether to send him back to his home and to the same side of Bethlehem Baptist Church to Mary M. A "BIG BROTHER" MIGHT HELP There was the case of another boy, irteen years old, who was haled into There was the case of another boy, arrived by the church. November 5, weather, cloudy our on a charge of housebreaking of larceny. The judge was not satisted with merely hearing the evidence gainst the boy. He wanted to know the boy had done this thing. So he case was continued, and the product atton officer was instructed to find atton of the form of the form n an asylum and that his mother had seen left with a family of five children, of whom Harry is next to the dren, of whom Harry is next to the clidest. He had worked hard and suffered, as his emaciated form showed; but he had had none of the pleasures of childhood; he had had no playthings save those he stole. It was a question with the judge whether he could doom such a boy to a reformatory. It was only natural that he should have things to play with. There was none to give him, the little things he desired, and he helped himself, when he could, to others' plenty.

For these the probation officers of the Juvenile Court ask the "big brothers'" help. For these two cases
